

Cohan to Play Again?

The news that George M. Cohan will soon play the Vagabond in the Tavern comes as something of a surprise at this particular moment, although a few months ago came close to stepping into the part at the Cohan Theater in New York. As matters now stand, "The Vagabond" will close at the Cohan in another week, and will resume in about two weeks more—a theater is now being sought—with Mr. Cohan as the cast. The latter promises to give the greatest performance that any one ever gave at any time and in any city, and the faithful will be in hand to see him do it.

Monte M. Katterjohn and Dorothy Dalton have been discussing old times recently, Miss Dalton having arrived from the East to play a leading part in Cecil B. DeMille's new production, "The Sign of the Cross." Mr. Katterjohn wrote "The Sign of the Cross" in which Miss Dalton made her stellar debut in Triangle days. He also wrote a lot of other successes for her.
